glorious a defence. The miserable state of the Ottoman forces was the theme of every utter from the seat of war, and the apprehensions of future danger were increased by the knowledge that the Russian armies were largely augmented, and that additional troops had been brought to the frontier even by the route of the Caspian. All this time the Porte and its advisers were inert. At a great expense, a large army of Turks was transported to Euphrates and divisions afterwards hurried to and fro between the position and Kamiesch to join in operations from which they were at the last moment uniformly excluded. There were not wanting those who urged the necessity of reinforcing the Asiatic army by a part of the useless levy. The history of these transactions has yet to be made clear, and it will be for the good of the world to see a full and those causes of complaint which are said to exist. When the city which has now fallen had been invested for weeks, when the interest and indignation of all observers had been roused, it was decided to withdraw Omar Pacha and his army from before Sebastopol, then preparing for its last struggle and to send them to the rescue of Kars.

How hastily and inefficiently the arrangement was made we need not record. At this moment Omar Pacha is reduced to inaction by the wants of his commissariat and transport departments. When he will be in a condition to take the field we know not. All the genius of the most able German would have been insufficient to accomplish the salvation of the beleaguered city and such conditions. In despair of other aid, those who reflected on the matter were reduced to put their trust in the snows of an Armenian winter. It now appears that success was resolved on by the enemy at a cost. In the midst of sufferings, probably hardly less than those of the besieged, they have penetrated and achieved a great

The Intelligencer
FRIDAY MORNING, JANUARY 4th

OUR SHEET.

We this week present our readers with an enlarged sheet, printed with entirely new material, which we intend to make worth the support of our friends. It shall be our earnest desire to make "THE INTELLIGENCER" with its increased amount of reading

The Type with which this paper is printed was procured from the Type Foundry of Messrs. White & Co., 65 Beekman St.

ner of Gold, New York; to whom we recommend any of our friends, should desire new type, as they will find the White, courteous, affable, and accommodating, which with terms as favorable as any in the United States, make pleasure to deal with them. Our Manual will be issued in a few weeks.

PARTIES AND POLITICIANS

It may not, at the commencement of the year, be out of place, to cast a slight prospective glance at political parties, and to therefrom derive useful lessons for the future. It is not far distant, when in Canada

These two groups were divided into distinct sections leading principles which actuated their movement. So diametrically opposed these doctrines, that while one portion of the community looked upon the other as a revolutionary, and republican, desiring as the consummation of their ambition and exertion the overthrow of Canada's connection with parent state, raising in its stead a democracy which would be repugnant to the best interests of their beloved and rapidly progressing country; while in return, they were rebuffed by the other section, as dogmatic in their trines—unrelenting in adhering to old customs, with the determination to perpetuate a system of laws and institutions.

The distinctive land marks which separated them, were lowered, and the gle became one more of place and p-than the carrying out of any particu-trine.

On the one hand we had the party in revelling in all the extravagancies characterise those who consider them-safe in their fastnesses, and the will an-of the people, (the great phantom that them to power,) entirely overlooked forgotten. Little presented itself to magnanimous views, other than person-grandement, except after a lapse of years, when it became necessary, not the will of those in authority, but constitutionally, to appeal to the country for a review of their engagements, that we find any attempt made to satisfy those in whose hands the constitution of our country, has placed the authority of retaining or dissolving, the high places, that we find any attempt to fulfil promises and pledges given by Hastings—then the patriotism of our countrymen shows forth with resplendent clearness, dear, and naught but the good of our country, escaped from their lips, but al-
